

PREVENTION, INTERVENTION, AND PROACTIVENESS:

UNDERSTANDING,
CONFRONTING AND
NEGOTIATING STD/STI
RISKS AND BLACK
WOMEN'S HEALTH

TULANE UNIVERSITY 4TH BIENNIAL BLACK WOMEN'S HEALTH CONFERENCE

SURVEY REPORT

SURVEY REPORT

The 4th Biennial Black Women’s Health Conference took place March 12, 2022. The mission of the Black Women’s Health Conference Task Force at Tulane University is to raise health awareness and increase knowledge of health-related issues and concerns that disproportionately impact black women and girls. The Black Women’s Health Conference provides a biennial forum for sharing, matching, and coordinating empirical evidence with praxis and experience to better understand and enrich health outcomes for black women and girls.

Participants consisted of 181 high school-aged black girls. Participants were provided with survey forms at the start of the event. Anonymous and voluntary survey completion followed each of the nine different conference sessions.

Largely, participants were satisfied with the level of information and demonstration provided during the sessions. Anecdotal comments surrounding body consciousness and comfort in difficult topics flood the surveys as the young girls were able to glean information from lead thinkers and educators in various fields of women’s health. Participants appreciated being engaged and informed by industry leaders and also expressed a desire for more opportunities like those provided by Tulane’s Black Women’s Health Conference.

Link To Conference Survey Reports